Energy and Pacing Tracker

See what each day costs you, and pace yourself before the crash.

WHY PACING HELPS

With fatigue, a busy day often costs more the next day. A traffic light for each part of the day shows which activities are easy, medium or hard for you. Over a few weeks you can see what comes before a crash, and plan rest before you need it.

A crash a day or two after effort is sometimes called post-exertional malaise.

FOUR SMALL STEPS

Plan	On a good day, write your pacing plan.
Mark	Write the main activity for each part of the day and tick its color.
Check	Each morning, note any payback from yesterday.
Review	At the end of the week, look at what came before each crash.

THE TRAFFIC LIGHT

Easy
Little effort. I could do it again.

Medium
Took some effort. I needed a short rest.

Hard
Took a lot. I felt it after.

New to pacing? If you are not sure of your baseline, guess low. After two weeks, look back and adjust.
